ALLIED HEALTH SHORTAGE

A Macro View

- The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics reports 69,000 more Clinical Lab Scientist and 68,000 more Medical Lab Technicians will be needed by 2012.
- But schools produce only 4,500 graduates annually, resulting in a 36% annual national shortage.
- According to the U.S. Department of Labor, 60% of the American healthcare workforce is made up of Allied Health Professionals.
- The Allied Health Professional shortage is predicted to reach 1.6 to 2.5 million by 2020.
- The supply of qualified allied healthcare providers is shrinking at the same time as the demand for healthcare is increasing thanks to a decade long decrease in enrollment in Allied Health Schools and educational programs.
